

Idaho State University

Professional Licensure Disclosure School Psychology

Idaho State University is regionally accredited by the Northwest Commission on Colleges and Universities (NWCCU), and is reporting this information in compliance with Standard 2.G.3. The School Psychology program is accredited by the Council for National Association of School Psychologists (NASP).

This program is designed to meet the educational requirements for school psychologists in Idaho. If you intend to seek licensure outside of Idaho after finishing your program, use the link below to find information on the state or U.S. territory in which you intend to be licensed in order to identify whether ISU's School Psychology program meets, does not meet, or cannot be confirmed as meeting the educational requirements for licensure. If ISU's program cannot be confirmed as meeting the educational requirements for licensure in the state in question, it may meet all or a portion of the educational requirements. If that is the case, we recommend that you contact the licensing agency directly before beginning the ISU program.

National Association of School Psychologists

This program cannot be confirmed as meeting the licensure requirements in all states other than Idaho.

For more information, please contact Emma Wood, woodemma@isu.edu.